

Is your transcript half-full or half-empty?

Page formats can be easily manipulated so that fewer characters and words appear on the transcript page. Additionally, some court reporting firms choose to add word indexes at full transcript page rates at the end of the transcript. Both of these practices adversely affect your bottom line by artificially increasing the volume of pages for which you are being charged, leaving your wallet half-empty.

To avoid unnecessary expense, choose a reporter that adheres to the National Court Reporters Association's transcript format guidelines.
